Hard Reality

Jean Allen

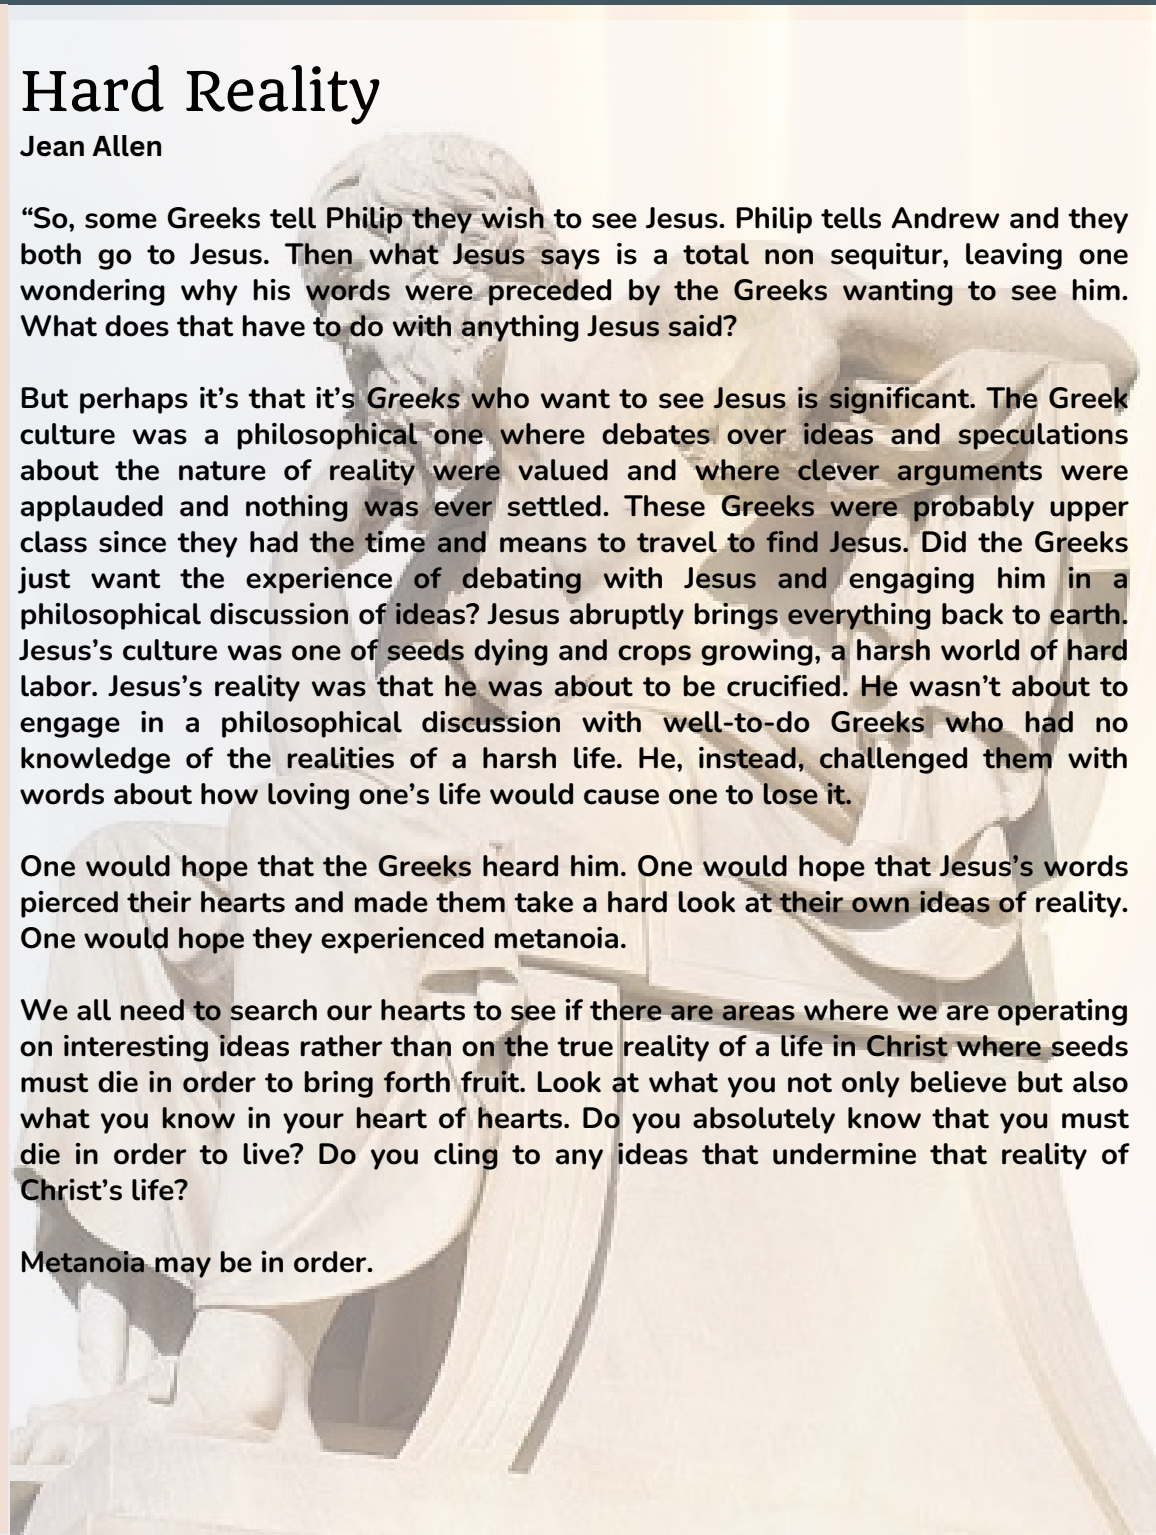

“So, some Greeks tell Philip they wish to see Jesus. Philip tells Andrew and they both go to Jesus. Then what Jesus says is a total non sequitur, leaving one wondering why his words were preceded by the Greeks wanting to see him. What does that have to do with anything Jesus said?

But perhaps it's that it's Greeks who want to see Jesus is significant. The Greek culture was a philosophical one where debates over ideas and speculations about the nature of reality were valued and where clever arguments were applauded and nothing was ever settled. These Greeks were probably upper class since they had the time and means to travel to find Jesus. Did the Greeks just want the experience of debating with Jesus and engaging him in a philosophical discussion of ideas? Jesus abruptly brings everything back to earth. Jesus's culture was one of seeds dying and crops growing, a harsh world of hard labor. Jesus's reality was that he was about to be crucified. He wasn't about to engage in a philosophical discussion with well-to-do Greeks who had no knowledge of the realities of a harsh life. He, instead, challenged them with words about how loving one's life would cause one to lose it.

One would hope that the Greeks heard him. One would hope that Jesus's words pierced their hearts and made them take a hard look at their own ideas of reality. One would hope they experienced metanoia.

We all need to search our hearts to see if there are areas where we are operating on interesting ideas rather than on the true reality of a life in Christ where seeds must die in order to bring forth fruit. Look at what you not only believe but also what you know in your heart of hearts. Do you absolutely know that you must die in order to live? Do you cling to any ideas that undermine that reality of Christ's life?

Metanoia may be in order.
